Hollywood

By Edith Gwynn

Marlon Brando, of Bway fame, is the latest rumored to be the leading male in "The Glass Menagerie" about to be filmed. This cast has had more "guesses" than a racing form.

Bill Holden has been growing cymbidiums (orchids, to you) ever since he discovered several of the precious bulbs at the valley home he bought from Leon Errol two years ago. Leon paid many hundreds for the plants. Holden has a hot-house now, with heating, watering, lighting, and other gadgets. Some cymbidium bulbs are valued as high as $2,000 when properly cultivated, but Bill won't know how "rich" his is in this department for a time yet, because it takes some of them two years and more to bloom. He got his identification tags beautifully mixed up!

HOLDEN

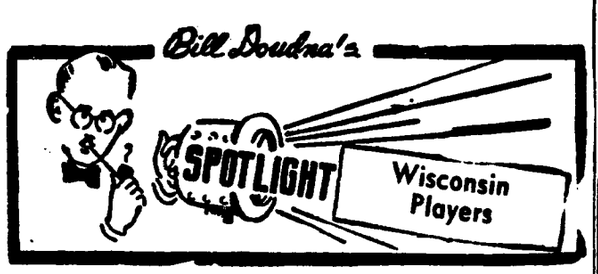
When Walter Chrysler was here he told some local chums that the H. Trumans have forced him out of the squab business. (Oh, yeh! He likes a lot of things that move besides cars!). Chrysler said that during the Roosevelt regime he raised 10,000 birds a year at his Virginia farm — a great part of which went for White House consumption, wot with banquets and all that. But he's had nary an order since the Trumans moved in because Bess doesn't like squab . . . While on the subject of raising something besides a temperature: Victor McLaglen is an authority on Jersey cattle. His 500 head herd of prize Jerseys is one of California's finest and Vic has signed a contract with Bordens for every quart of milk produced.

Wedding plans of Carole Matthews and songsmith Sam Coslow have hit a snag.

Just before Darryl Zanuck sailed for Europe he bought Jean Beckett's magazine yarn, "The Irresistible Liar," at a fancy price.

The Doll's House in Balboa features a drink called, "Cucumber" (Southern Comfort, Creme de Menthe, and Creme de Cacao—if you're still here!) but they ought to call it a "Pickle." Whoever heard of getting "cucumbered?"

One of the dullest parties ever given hereabouts was that soiree of Lem Ayres and Saint Suber's — after the premiere of "Kiss Me Kate." Hundreds of people invited to a midnight supper at the Town House — but the hosts provided no food — not even a cup of coffee. Merely cocktail canapes and your big, fat choice of Scotch or Bourbon. Friend of ours ordered a pot of tea—and was handed a check for it! Are things that tough? Since there were only "afternoon" refreshments and the hosts were from N. Y. — maybe it was the difference in time that confused them. (Haw;)



What factors made Wisconsin Players' production of "Antigone" a less powerful drama than it might well have been are debatable. Was it the dramatist's theme, that Caesars cannot take all — that some things belong to man and some to God? Was it his play, or was it the adaptation from French to English? Was it the acting, or was it the direction?

When Jean Anouilh's version of the Greek drama was produced in Nazi-occupied Paris, it was a daring thing, for its thesis defied the conquerors. With war's end, much of that impact is gone.

When the 90-minute play was turned to English, it may have lost much in translation. One feels that its poetry would have been more fluent in French, that its moments of stark tragedy could have been more brutal, and thus more moving.

• • •

To state his ideas, Anouilh used the story of the daughter of Oedipus and her defiance of her tyrannical uncle, whose tyranny at last turned back upon him.

This uncle, Creon, took the throne of Thebes upon the deaths of Oedipus' two sons. To one, he gave a state funeral. The other, he decreed, should be left unburied on a hillside, and any who tried to bury him should die.

Antigone resolved to bury the body, and was caught. Creon's arguments did not move her, and she went to face death alone in a sealed tomb. But Haemon, her fiance and the son of Creon, died with her, and the queen killed herself upon hearing the news.

• • •

As for the acting, the central figure was ably portrayed by Marjorie Schaffer, Antigone was necessarily a totally tragic woman. Done with less restraint, she might have been maudlin, or might have given the suggestion of insanity.

'ANTIGONE'
By Jean Anouilh
THE CAST

Chorus	John MacEachron
Antigone	Marjorie Schaffer
Nurse	Mary Fluhrer
Ismene	Margaret Hallack
Haemon	Norman Kaiser
First Guard	Charles Scott
Second Guard	Marvin Carter
Third Guard	Robert Kaltz
Messenger	William West
Page	Richard Leeman
Eurydice	Doris Staidl

But Miss Schaffer made her purposeful and adamant, and that made her credible, made the desire to dare death for her aim a warm and somehow beautiful thing.

Against her was the cold austerity of Creon, her uncle, her king, and the father of her betrothed. Kenneth Abrahamson played the roll well, but often gave it the stiffness of starch rather than of steel.

To these two fell the major share of the lines. John MacEachron, as the chorus, tried too hard to be casual, and so become artificial. Mary Fluhrer had a good scene as Antigone's nurse, upbraiding her for an imagined rendezvous. Norman Kaiser was unforgivably unreal as the king's son.

Jonathan Curvin's direction kept movement, or the suggestion of it, going pretty well, despite the fact that it was a play of lines rather than of action. And Wayne Wolfert's setting and lighting were up to the high standard of the best Players productions.
